Annual Giving plays an important role at Wheeling Jesuit University. Each year, the University relies on alumni, friends, and other external sources for funding to help support its operational expenses and to make improvements throughout the campus. Gifts are categorized into the following three types:

Unrestricted – gifts can be used at the University’s discretion to meet the strategic initiatives,

Designated – gifts given to support a particular area of the University, i.e. College of Health Sciences, Chapel, Library,

New Endowments - gifts given to establish new scholarships or support existing scholarships,

In fiscal year 2013 the University raised more than $2.9 million dollars.

Dear Alumni and Friends,

With a new academic year about to commence, so much is happening on campus and in the local community — happenings that will impact our students, faculty, neighbors and alumni. This issue of the Chronicle provides insights into a number of projects that are changing the teaching and learning as well as the landscape of the campus — projects that will provide a blueprint for our future.

Enrollment is up again this year with more transfer students and international students than ever before in the history of the University. Every bed on campus is filled and plans are being made for the public-private development of townhouses for faculty and graduate students.

We made a decision in the Strategic Planning Process to establish two colleges within the University — the College of Arts and Sciences and the School of Health Sciences. The move positions the University to provide educational value tailored to the needs of each academic discipline and resulting in exceptional student learning outcomes.

Focused growth is a phrase that explains what is happening around campus today.

In order to handle the expansion of the physical therapy doctoral program members of the University community worked with city and regional economic development officials to move the program to downtown Wheeling, where it will take up residence in late August.

Upgrades to the outdoor track and field are planned. Last year, a fundraising effort was launched to turf the stadium field and make important renovations during the next few years to the stadium and the track. Work has begun on Phase 1, which is expected to be completed in late October.

A new recital hall, planned to open this fall, will keep the legacy of the Sisters of the Visitation alive in Wheeling — on the campus of WJU. And, wrestling was added as the newest varsity sport, bringing the number of men and women’s sports teams to 20.

In this new academic year, I ask again for your continued support and prayers. I begin my tenure as your president with a deep faith in your love of Wheeling Jesuit and enthusiasm for Jesuit education. I look forward to seeing you on campus as we work together to build a stronger campus and community.

Wheeling Jesuit undertakes expansion of arts and athletic field.
EXPANSION, GROWTH, RENOVATIONS — are words echoed around the campus. This year, the University undertakes a number of projects to enhance current facilities, increase enrollment and programs, as well as position Wheeling Jesuit for continued success.

Three major renovation projects are under way, all made possible by the generosity of alumni and friends.

The Home Field Advantage project calls for renovations to the main stadium, including turf on the stadium field and resurfacing the track.

The Mount de Chantal Music Conservatory is being planned for the ground floor of the Center for Educational Technologies building. The project will provide recital hall for performances, practice rooms and a gallery that will keep the legacy of the Mount alive and available for all to enjoy.

And in a twist, the University has moved its physical therapy program to downtown Wheeling into a former department store. The move will provide state-of-the-art facilities for the PT program, as well as free up on-campus space for expansion of other academic programs.

Expanding the academic structure is another key element of growth around campus. This year, Wheeling Jesuit established two schools of study — the College of Arts and Sciences and the College of Health Sciences. This move falls in line with the University’s strategic plan.

Additionally, Wheeling Jesuit added wrestling to its expanding sports teams and introduced an engineering program, while recruitment is finding success attracting students from outside the U.S. borders. International recruitment is on the rise.

In the pages that follow, you can see all the details of these projects and their impact on Wheeling Jesuit.
Two new schools, two new deans

In a move that is consistent with the growth outlined in its strategic plan, Wheeling Jesuit established two schools within the University — the College of Arts & Sciences and the College of Health Sciences — and named two long-time WJU educators as deans.

The new College of Arts and Sciences consists of the liberal arts such as English, history, theology, business and biology, while the College of Health Sciences is comprised of athletic training, physical therapy, nursing, nuclear medicine and respiratory therapy.

At the helm of the two schools will be two experienced educators: Dr. Robert Phillips, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences; and Dr. Helen Faso, dean of the School of Health Sciences.

According to Rev. James Fleming, S.J., president of Wheeling Jesuit, the new organizational structure will allow Wheeling Jesuit to provide more specialized attention to the curriculum and better meet the needs of the students.

“The establishment of the two colleges fits with our strategic plan, raising our performance and resulting in exceptional student learning outcomes,” he said.

Fr. Fleming added that having two separate schools better serves the University’s growing student population.

“Our institutional structure needs to reflect our strong belief in the importance of the traditional liberal arts degree programs, while also supporting our growing health science programs,” he said.

“The move of physical therapy to its new home in downtown Wheeling, the rapid expansion of four on-line nursing programs, our academic partnership with Wheeling Hospital and our new simulator laboratory, help make this the right time to create two colleges within the University,” he continued. “In addition, by having two academic schools, the deans can work more closely with our faculty, which will result in better teaching and learning experiences for both graduate and undergraduate students.”

The new deans are settling into their new roles, and both have a vision for how the students and the University itself will benefit from the new structure.

“My colleagues and I would like to encourage more conversations and collaboration across disciplinary boundaries,” stated Phillips, who has served as chair of the department of social science at WJU since 2008. “So much good work goes on not only in the classroom, but all across campus and out in the broader community, and we need to let more people know about this good work. Our graduates are exceptionally well prepared to succeed not only in the work force, but also in professional and graduate school. As a faculty, we know their success stories and should not hesitate to tell others about them.”

Of the College of Arts and Sciences, Phillips says, “We have a good blend of programs in the professions and the liberal arts, plus a great faculty who are committed to teaching and research. We need to build upon the strengths we already possess, so that we can provide an even better education for our students.”

Faso, who was professor of nursing before being named dean, and served as associate academic dean from 1998 through 2010, echoed Phillips’ desire for collaboration.

“Combining all of the health sciences in one school will allow students to develop collaborative relationships with those professionals they will be working with in the provision of medical care to a wide variety of patients,” she said.

Pointing to the recent opening of a simulation laboratory, which will be used by students in various disciplines within the College of Health Sciences, Faso explained, “By practicing together, the students will become more knowledgeable about the functions of the other medical professionals they will be working with in actual practice. It is our plan to be able to share visiting experts with all of the health science majors, rather than just one.”

Faso also said that discussions are under way regarding the addition of common courses that could be offered to all health science students.

The new deans have had impressive careers both before and since coming to Wheeling Jesuit.

Phillips came to Wheeling Jesuit in 1998 as an instructor of political science and was associate professor at the time of his being named dean. He also has served as curriculum coordinator for the Master of Science in Organizational Leadership (MSOL) since 2005.

He holds a bachelor’s degree in political science from North Central College and a doctorate in political science from Northern Illinois University.

Prior to coming to Wheeling Jesuit University to teach in 1980, Faso was a staff nurse at Ohio Valley General Hospital, Duke University Medical Center, West Virginia Medical Center, Flushing Medical Center in New York and Roanoke Memorial Hospital in Virginia, and an instructor at the Medical College of Georgia.

Faso holds a bachelor’s degree in nursing from WVU, a master’s degree in nursing from the Medical College of Georgia and a doctorate in nursing from the University of Texas at Austin.

New engineering sciences degree at WJU set to kick off in Fall 2013

Two years of planning and preparation came to fruition in January when the University announced it would offer a degree in engineering.

According to Dr. Peter Ehni ’81, chair of the Engineering Science Department, the impetus for the new program stemmed from rising demand for qualified workers in local industry.

“The school had talked about having some sort of engineering program. But I think the final stimulus came from having some local industry folks saying we’re going to need more engineers, and would we be willing to start a program … and that they thought there would be employment available,” Ehni explained.

The program is designed to give students solid footing in the engineering sciences to prepare them for the rigors of third and fourth year course work, and for specialist graduate school programs.
PT Program moving to downtown

State-of-the-art facilities and additional space are what physical therapy students and faculty can expect in late August when they relocate into the former Stone and Thomas Building in downtown Wheeling.

In April, the University announced a joint venture with the Regional Economic Development Partnership (RED) and the city of Wheeling to develop a portion of the former department store, now known as the Stone Center for PT classrooms/labs, an auditorium and a free clinic. This collaboration will, according to Rev. James Fleming S.J., WJU president, move WJU’s PT program from its current 12,000 square feet facility inside the McDonough Center into the Stone Center, where it will occupy more than 30,000 square feet on two floors.

“We couldn’t have done this without the help of RED and the city. The renovation costs are being covered by both these entities and the University will repay this expense through rent over a 15-year period,” said Fr. Fleming.

The total cost of the renovations, he said, is about $4 million, and the University did not have to provide any of the upfront costs associated with the renovations.

The city, said Craig Ruby, director of the Physical Therapy program, will benefit from an influx of students and faculty in the downtown region.

Talk of moving PT out of McDonough, Ruby said, had been discussed for about three years, because the program has run out of space. “With 50 students per section now, we have simply outgrown our current classrooms and labs. We are just crunched for space.”

The fourth floor location in the new facility has two times the number of classrooms and skills labs that the McDonough Center offered. There is also a student lounge/study area, a computer lab, 14 faculty offices and an adjunct faculty office, Ruby explained.

The new location also will provide the program with the opportunity to “marginally” increase enrollment in the future. Ruby said any expansion of enrollment has to be in line with the accrediting board.

Fr. Fleming said of all the programs at WJU, physical therapy is the only stand-alone program – moving it off campus will have no negative impact on any other academic program.

What both he and Ruby are excited about is the urban setting the program now has.

“Ignatius was clearly an urban person and saw the importance of colleges being a part of a city. Being in the center of Wheeling makes Wheeling Jesuit and its students much more available for our mission,” Fr. Fleming explained.

Ruby said the new location would allow the students and faculty to live out Wheeling Jesuit’s mission to be men and women for others.

“Having the free clinic in the city will allow us to serve residents without insurance or who have exhausted their insurance benefits. We will work with other community partners to provide medical services to those who are in the most need,” he added.

While the PT program has offered free services on campus to indigent residents and the under insured, Fleming said, many of those who are most in need have no way of getting to campus. The relocation to the Stone Center places the free clinic in an area that is more accessible to those people most in need of its services. In addition to students and faculty from the PT program, students and professors from other health science disciplines will be volunteering at the clinic as well.

The 1,500-square-foot clinic is located on the first floor of the building and can be accessed from the newly renovated Market Street entrance. Ruby said he hopes with additional funding to expand the clinic operations from two mornings a week to offering daily services. And he thinks, referrals will increase from the local hospitals, other health care agencies, the Catholic Neighborhood Center, in addition to the current agencies who make referrals.

The area provides separate treatment rooms and specialized equipment required for a proper treatment facility. About $300,000 of outside funding is being sought to cover the cost of new equipment for the clinic. Alumni and friends can contact the WJU Advancement Office at advancement@wju.edu for more information on ways to help.

In addition to the clinic, Ruby said the first floor area has a gym, locker rooms, a dedicated research space and an auditorium that can hold 140 people. The auditorium can be split into two rooms to accommodate smaller meetings or conferences.

“The new location will provide faculty and students with a new culture. I’m excited to be in the city. This move makes us an even greater, more visible part of the Wheeling community.”

Fleming agrees. “This is a win-win for Wheeling and Wheeling Jesuit. Our students and faculty will bring more life and business into the city’s downtown area. We hope it will be a springboard for future development in the downtown. The new location provides the PT students and faculty with a better, larger learning environment, which I believe will result in an exciting educational experience.”

PT Program moving to Stone Center

In December 2012, Wheeling Jesuit University announced the addition of wrestling, expanding the varsity sports line up to 20.

Wheeling-area resident, Sean Doyle will be the inaugural coach of the fledgling program.

“Wheeling Jesuit has been built on a tradition of excellence, which is a great partnership with the sport of wrestling, because of the character, discipline, work ethic and leadership skills the sport demands,” Doyle said.

“We hit the ground running and identified student-athletes that fit the institution’s mission perfectly. We have 30 student-athletes committed to our first recruiting class, which includes state finalists and qualifiers from West Virginia, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, New York and North Carolina,” the coach added.

A large majority of incoming wrestlers are freshman coupled with a few transfers. The Cardinals secured four West Virginia state second place finishers in Nate Starkey, Skyler Terrell, Danny Colby and Logan Bowman, and added one Ohio state runner-up award winner, Corey Siegfried. Austin Short (Va.) and Dominick Nania (Pa.) were fourth in their respective state competitions, while Scott Lopez (W.Va.), Brian Estep (Pa.), Damon Outward (Ohio) and Dustin Kuhlwein (Ohio),
Wheeling Jesuit establishes conservatory

Construction is under way on a new initiative on campus – the Mount de Chantál Conservatory of Music at Wheeling Jesuit University.

In October 2012, the University joined with the Sisters of the Visitation in announcing plans to establish the facility to honor the legacy of the Sisters and keep their educational mission alive by providing WJU students with musical instruction in the tradition of Mount de Chantál Visitation Academy.

“The idea of creating the Mount de Chantál Conservatory of Music at Wheeling Jesuit University is built on a friendship that has flourished for centuries between the Visitation Sisters and the Society of Jesus (Jesuits), and locally for more than 50 years between Mount de Chantál and WJU,” said Wheeling Jesuit President Rev. James J. Fleming, S.J.

Renovation began this summer on a 5,000-square-foot space in the University’s Center for Educational Technologies building, transforming it into the new home for the study and practice of music on campus. The Conservatory will include a recital hall, which will seat 112 and easily convert to a classroom setting; and the Sisters of the Visitation Gallery, showcasing antiques, artwork and artifacts from Mount de Chantál. The two spaces will be joined by a lobby and a parlor. Behind the scenes will be office space and rooms for lessons or practice.

“We are tremendously happy to entrust our legacy – the legacy of Mount de Chantál – to Wheeling Jesuit University,” said Sr. Joanne Gonter VHM ’59, a Mount grad, former teacher at Mount de Chantál and superior of the Wheeling-based Sisters. “We are fully confident in the University’s plans to expand its reach into the fine arts by establishing the Conservatory and we look forward to its growth in the years to come.”

Wheeling Jesuit has received nearly $1 million in gifts toward the $3 million goal for the Conservatory. This includes a leadership gift of $300,000 from the Sisters of the Visitation. Local foundations and individuals have contributed additional major gifts, and Mount de Chantál alumnae have supported the initiative with donations totaling $43,000.

One foundation gift allowed for the appointment of the University’s first director of bands and instrumental music, Dr. James Gourlay, who is also music director of Pittsburgh’s popular River City Brass (RCB). WJU began a collaboration with the RCB in 2011 whereby Dr. Gourlay helped the University establish and form the symphonic band and pep band. The symphonic band, now numbering some 35 members, is joined by the RCB for concerts.

four choirs. Each year, one incoming female student will receive a $10,000 Mount de Chantal Music Scholarship, renewable annually for four years. The first recipient is Samantha Herrington, from Bethel Park, Pa.

The Sisters also have donated various items from Mount de Chantal, including the building’s front door, beveled glass panels that surrounded the door, and two chandeliers – from the front hall and the Parents’ Parlor. These items will be incorporated into the new space. The Mount’s 800-pound bell, which hung for 150 years in the school’s tower, will be given a place of prominence at the entrance to the Conservatory.

Archival items donated by the Sisters, on display in the Sisters of the Visitation Art Gallery, include photographs, music and publications including an 1858 book entitled The Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary, which belonged to Sr. Mary Agnes Gubert. In the mid-19th century, Sr. Mary Agnes gave up a promising international singing career to join the Sisters of the Visitation and is credited with bringing fame to Mount de Chantal’s Department of Music.

The University plans to hold a formal dedication of the Conservatory Nov. 16 and 17.

Fundraising continues as the University seeks to build the scholarship fund and support fine arts faculty. In addition, naming opportunities are available for the recital hall, the parlor, the donor wall and others. For more information on making a gift, contact the WJU Advancement office at advancement@wju.edu or Kathryn Kelly at kkelly@wju.edu.

The Recital Hall (as shown in the rendering above) will accommodate 112 audience members. For classroom use, the room can be reconfigured easily by moving chairs and bringing in tables.

Katharine Klos, WJU ’65, at left, is one of four 1961 Mount de Chantal graduates who toured the Conservatory space prior to construction. With Klos are Dolores Wallace, Catherine Rakow and Mary Rita Sonderman. They stand behind the 800-pound bell that hung in the Mount’s bell tower. The bell will be displayed in a place of prominence in the Conservatory.
A major upgrade to the Wheeling Jesuit outdoor athletic complex will make the facility competitive with any college facility in the region.

With seven sports vying for the use of the field or track, plus student intramurals, the University made a commitment to upgrade the main field to provide year-round access for both students and athletes, as well as its community partners.

“Natural grass surfaces are no longer an option with men’s and women’s soccer, men’s and women’s lacrosse and rugby each needing time on the field. When you factor the weather conditions into this equation, turfing the field provides our sports teams, students, and the community with the best options for nearly year-round access,” said Rev. Jim Fleming, S.J., president.

Director of Athletics Danny Sancomb said due to the poor field conditions over the past two years, some of the sports teams have had to practice at neighboring fields and in some cases, played their home games off campus.

“The renovations will give our student-athletes the opportunity to play on the best complex in our region and will help us attract the best student-athletes. We need to keep our teams on campus to play their home games – allowing them to showcase their talents in front of the students and have a home field advantage,” Sancomb continued.

In March, Wheeling Jesuit launched a drive — Homefield Advantage Campaign — to raise the funds necessary for the facility upgrades. To date, $1.4 has been raised for the project and WJU leaders continue their efforts to raise funds for the renovations.

The University has partnered with the Cardinal Athletic Club, Wheeling Central Catholic High School and the family of former Bishop of the Diocese of Wheeling-Charleston, The Most Rev. Bernard Schmitt, on the campaign.

Fr. Fleming said the University plans to name the field in Bishop Schmitt’s honor. He noted that Wheeling Jesuit has named other facilities around campus in honor of past bishops and it seemed only appropriate to recognize Bishop Schmitt in this way.

“Bishop Schmitt was a true sports fan and a great supporter of education, and the Cardinal Athletic Club and the University decided naming the field in his honor was a small way to recognize a man who had been such a friend to this university,” the president added.

Members of Schmitt’s family, lead by his brother, Bob, are actively involved in the campaign and the drive to raise the funds necessary. The Schmitt family and the Cardinal Athletic Club have committed to raising a half million dollars for the project.

The complex renovations will be done in five phases at a total cost of more than $5.75 million.

Phase one of the project calls for synthetic turf surface on the stadium field.

Phase two calls for lighting upgrades, resurfacing the track, expanding the home and visitors seating, renovating the press box, installing a new scoreboard and reconfiguring the entrance area. This phase should begin in the spring of 2014.

Construction of a new locker room facility, concession stand, ticket booth and pavilion make up phase three of the project. Phase four will be configuring the track throwing area and the final phase is the construction of an indoor practice facility.

Developing of the plans and bidding the projects has begun. According to Fr. Fleming and Frank Connelly, director of facilities, work to resurface the field could commence in September. Sancomb and athletic teams are eager to see the project started.

In addition to Wheeling Jesuit teams, the Wheeling Central Catholic football team will call “Schmitt Field” home. Once the complex is complete, the Maroon Knights will play their home games on campus.

Sancomb said, “Wheeling Central needs a place to play their games. They currently play at Wheeling Island Stadium, which is Wheeling Park’s home field. Schmitt Field will give them the opportunity to have their own home field.”

“This is a perfect match and it will help to bring high school students on our campus,” he added.

Anyone interested in making donations or learning more about naming rights, should contact Noah Mull, alumni gift officer, at nmull@wju.edu for more information.
Wheeling Jesuit University has seen increased enrollment numbers recently, thanks in large part to a 18 percent increase in overall applications during the last three years — and nowhere is that increase more apparent than in the international student population.

When walking around campus, an international presence can be felt. Different languages can be heard, and different cultures are represented in sometimes small, but meaningful ways.

“The fact we’re such a small university, and we have students from 26 different countries, we know this provides an enhanced learning experience for all students,” said Larry Vallar, vice president of Enrollment Management. “You could be sitting in the classroom with 10 or 12 other students and five or six of them could be from five different countries, speaking five different languages. That provides a different learning experience for students, and one we consider a point of pride.”

WJU has more than doubled the number of international students on campus since 2010, with a total of 159 enrolled in 2013. The number of international applicants has also grown by 164 percent since 2008.

Vallar added that these statistics are achieved not by coincidence, but by design, planning and effort.

“The institution made international enrollment a priority and built it into its strategic plan — this notion that we want to be an international campus. Wheeling Jesuit’s core mission of life, leadership and service with and for others is global in its nature. The world is a small place. We want students to have a comprehensive and holistic experience. We believe engaging with other students from other parts of the world is a unique, collegiate experience that we can offer.”

Once increased international enrollment became part of the school’s strategic plan, Vallar and his team had to put the right people in place. One of the key contributors to the cause is Octavie Nkama ’09, who is currently the international admissions representative.

“My philosophy is to hire former WJU students, because they are the individuals that can best articulate the essence of the University,” said Vallar. “Octavie is a WJU graduate, has her master’s, is from the Congo, Africa and speaks multiple languages. She’s a good fit.”

Nkama has been a major contributor to the growth of the international representation on campus. As a graduate, she attributes the school’s welcoming family atmosphere as an example of why the international representation has grown.

“It shows that the campus is diverse and very welcoming,” says Nkama. “When I was a student, my freshman year, I was the only student from Africa. Now there are more than five countries representing Africa on this campus.”

Nkama added that the school’s reputation and location also play a major role in giving international students the confidence to choose WJU for their American education experience.

“International students like the location (an hour from an international airport), the safe environment, the attention the students receive on campus, the scholarships that they receive and, mostly, the good reputation that Jesuit education has around the world,” she added.
“Engineering programs typically have drop out rates of 50 percent and higher,” Ehni said. “WJU’s program is specifically designed to retain students through a special calculus sequence and freshman engineering orientation program.”

Since the announcement in January, Larry Vallar, vice president for Enrollment Management, and his team have been busy recruiting the first class of students for the four-year program. The first cohort has 15 students. Vallar also points to the growth of the local industries as an opportunity to deliver an in-demand education.

“We did a lot of traveling to raise awareness of the engineering science degree,” said Vallar. “We concentrated in the Baltimore, DC, Philadelphia areas and locally, and have gotten some traction. We’ve talked with parents, students and school administrators, and when you say engineering science their eyes get big. They know this is a hot sector right now in industry. This is what kids are interested in.”

With fall classes right around the corner, the three faculty members who will teach in the program have been busy preparing the course of study. Four years worth of class syllabi have been written, and re-written. According to Ehni, because it’s new, the program actually lends itself to a degree of flexibility, allowing faculty to tweak and adjust the course material as the first cohort moves through its studies.

“I’m really excited. I’ve been looking at the classes for next year, the books, and I’m excited to start with this cohort of students,” said Ehni “They’ll get to be the first, and they’ll get to help shape the program. We’ll see what their needs are, and we’ll see some things that work really well, some things that don’t really work, and their feedback will help us make a better program.”

Alumni who work in the field of the engineering science can contribute their expertise to this group of engineers-to-be. The Engineering Science Department is seeking alumni to sit on an advisory committee to ensure the curriculum remains cutting edge and relevant to today’s workplace. Interested alumni are encouraged to contact Ehni at pehni@wju.edu.

Engineering students work on various projects to help build their knowledge.
The Wheeling Jesuit University class of 2013 carried from the school’s 55th annual commencement ceremony a message of kinship for their fellow man as they set out to make a difference in their community, country and the world in which they live.

Rev. Greg Boyle, S.J. of Homeboy Industries in Los Angeles, Calif., delivered the inspirational commencement address to the 385-member graduating class, their cheering families and friends and the WJU faculty and staff.

Recalling stories and experiences from his work at Homeboy Industries, where he leads one of the nation’s largest organizations dedicated to the reintegration of at-risk youth and former gang members back into society, Fr. Boyle expressed a message of kinship and service to fellow man as the driving force behind his works, and the potential force of the graduating class that could be unleashed on the world.

“You go from here with a vision of wanting the world to look differently than it currently looks,” said Fr. Boyle.

“You want to create a community of kinships so that God in fact might recognize it. So all of us are called to imagine a community of kinship and a circle of compassion.”

“Then we are called to imagine that nobody is standing outside that circle,” he added. “So we inch our way out into the margins where we get to stand with the poor and the powerless and the voiceless. If kinship is our goal, we will not be promoting justice, we would in fact be celebrating it. No kinship, no justice. No kinship, no peace. To the folks on the margins of life, no prison can keep your kinship with them out and no death can it away.

Fr. Boyle also was awarded an honorary doctorate of humane letters.

Wheeling businessman Michael D. Ferns was awarded an honorary doctorate of business. The owner of A&B Auto Sales started out with a small car lot along National Road in 1992. Today, his car dealership operates a 130,000-square-foot facility in Benwood, W.Va. He has been a supporter of the University through his involvement in the Cardinal Athletic Club (CAC) for the past 10 years. Ferns and the CAC have helped to coordinate the University’s efforts to provide WJU students and the community with a state-of-the-art athletic facility at Wheeling Jesuit.

Valedictorian Rebecca Olsavsky of Wheeling, and graduate of the Linsly School spoke to her classmates about choices, and how their experience together at Wheeling Jesuit will shape their choices for years to come.

“What are choices?” she asked. “They are the deliberate decisions we make every day. We face both small scale and large-scale choices in our lives. While some are easy, others are hard. Sometimes choice even means reacting to negative things, like failure or loss, as all of us have experienced at some point in life. Yet, we have the benefit of a Jesuit education that not only entails developing our abilities within the classroom, but also making choices in life, leadership and service. These choices build character.”

More than 100 students from Wheeling Jesuit University presented research findings at the 14th annual Student Research and Scholarship Symposium.

The event featured 58 poster presentations and 52 oral presentations on student research in the areas of clinical, natural and physical sciences, humanities, social and behavior sciences, computer science, and technology development.

Student research topics covered a wide variety of subjects.
Growing up in Morgantown, W.Va., Jenna Klemkowsky had dreams of being an astronaut and studying air and space. Little did she know that one day her love of science and math, and her dreams of studying the heavens would take her around the world to pursue that dream.

Klemkowsky, a senior physics major and a member of the women’s soccer team, was awarded an international research opportunity along side some of the world’s best researchers at the University of Birmingham in England. As an undergraduate, she is studying graduate-level gravitational physics at Birmingham’s School of Physics and Astronomy. The University of Birmingham and the University of Florida co-sponsor the prestigious summer-long trip across the pond.

“I feel like every kid wants to be an astronaut when they grow up,” said Klemkowsky. “I went to space camp through the Challenger Learning Center when I was little, and I believe that sparked my interest from the beginning.”

As only one of 12 students nationwide selected to the program, WJU Chair of Physics Peter Ehni said Klemkowsky deserves the recognition for all her hard work.

“It makes me feel good to see her succeed,” said Ehni. “She’s the kind of student that typifies Wheeling Jesuit University. She comes from West Virginia, she’s worked hard and now she gets an opportunity to experience the world, which is one of the goals of a WJU education. We are very proud of her.”

claimed fifth in their state tournaments.

The Cardinals’ schedule includes 17 matches with six home matches at the Alma Grace McDonough Center. WJU will open the season on the road in Charleston, S.C. against The Citadel, Saturday, Nov. 2. Wheeling Jesuit is scheduled to host its first home match Friday, Nov. 8 against Alma College (Mich.). The schedule of meets can be found on the team’s web site.

“We want people to be excited and support Wheeling Jesuit wrestling,” said Coach Doyle. “The University is located between two powerhouse states for wrestling, Ohio and Pennsylvania, which are arguably two of the best in the country. We have attracted student-athletes from seven states, have a top notch venue for competition and intend to compete at a high level in our first year.”

In addition, a state-of-the-art wrestling room/practice facility will be added in the McDonough Center.

Doyle began his coaching career at Wheeling Central Catholic High School. He spent two seasons with the Maroon Knights. After the 2006-07 season, Doyle was named head coach at Wheeling Park High School, where he led the Patriots for five seasons (2007-12). During his tenure, Wheeling Park finished in the top five of the state tournament four-out-of-five years, garnering two runner-up trophies. He earned the Ohio Valley Athletic Conference Coach of the Year award twice, and in 2008, was named West Virginia Coach of the Year.
Wheeling Jesuit health sciences receives grant to develop innovative learning model

Wheeling Jesuit University has been awarded a major grant to improve health care education to meet the needs of the future of the industry, particularly for underserved populations.

The Congregation of St. Joseph has awarded WJU a Generous Promise grant of $35,000 to develop an innovative, Collaborative Learning Model (CLM), which implements a trans-disciplinary systemic change in health care education. Central to the CLM is a new human adult patient simulator, which allows students to practice their skills in real life medical scenarios.

“With the help of this grant, Wheeling Jesuit students will be expertly prepared to incorporate advanced collaborative skills in their careers, which will position them well as health care professionals who will serve our community,” said Rev. James Fleming, S.J., WJU president. “We are so grateful to the Congregation of St. Joseph for making it possible for our students to receive such an excellent learning experience.”

The program replaces learning silos with interdisciplinary and collaborative academics and activities. The learning model shifts the paradigm in which health professionals are trained, encouraging them to work as highly skilled teams, improving patient care, especially for underserved populations. The learning model and patient simulator are essential components of WJU’s newly established College of Health Sciences.

“Quality health care requires a collaborative, respectful and evidence-based approach in treating to whole person,” said Cam Twarog, WJU director of Clinical Education for WJU’s Respiratory Therapy program. “I’m proud to be part of an institution that is proactive in adjusting curriculum to meet the health care needs of today and tomorrow.” 🌷
WJU recognizes two community leaders with new award

Two Wheeling area community leaders were the first recipients of the Communitas Award given by Wheeling Jesuit University at its Graduation Banquet Thursday, May 16.

Each year during commencement ceremonies, Wheeling Jesuit honors members of the graduating class, alumni and community members for their service and contributions. This year, WJU chose Regional Economic Development Partnership (RED) Executive Director Don Rigby and Brad Blair, market president, JP Morgan Chase, who serves as president and chairman of the RED board of directors, to receive the Communitas Award.

“The University designed this award as a way to recognize community members who exemplify WJU’s mission of life, leadership and service,” said WJU President Rev. James Fleming, S.J. “Both Don and Brad lead visionary community initiatives through their involvement in RED,” he added.

“RED’s support of the University’s plan to move its physical therapy program to the Stone Center and the establishment of a free physical therapy clinic to aid the underserved residents of Wheeling, epitomizes the award’s intentions. Wheeling Jesuit sees both Don and Brad as role models for our students. They personify the very spirit of community,” said Fr. Fleming added.

Since joining RED in 1999, Rigby has assisted more than 100 companies to expand in or relocate to West Virginia. Through his efforts, RED is now the largest economic development organization in the state of West Virginia.

Blair, a 1987 graduate of Wheeling Jesuit’s MBA program, has worked hand-in-hand with Rigby and RED to attract business development to the Wheeling area. He too played an instrumental role in helping the University relocate its physical therapy program to downtown Wheeling.

Wheeling Jesuit University inducted 17 new members into Alpha Sigma Nu, the national Jesuit honor society, in April.

Alpha Sigma Nu honors students who distinguish themselves in scholarly pursuits, loyalty to the ideals of Jesuit education and service to others.

WJU’s Fr. Michael Steltenkamp, S.J., said, “Alpha Sigma Nu is the premier honor society on each Jesuit university campus. To qualify for induction, one must be recognized for excelling in academics, service to others, and fidelity to values represented by Jesuit tradition. Even then, only a limited number of juniors and seniors are inducted each year.”

WJU Alpha Sigma Nu chapter was recognized in 2005 by the University of Kentucky’s Institute for Rural Journalism and Community Issues as a model program for the 27 other Jesuit institutions of higher learning, as it is the only school whose service project of delivering leftover bread from grocery stores and bakeries to Wheeling’s Catholic Neighborhood Center is a year-round operation.

This year’s inductees participated in a wide array of service projects in addition to the “Daily Bread” runs, including immersion trips to New Orleans and El Salvador.

Following is the complete list of 2013 inductees.

WJU students benefit from Circle of Vision scholarships

Six Wheeling Jesuit students are recipients of scholarships through the West Virginia Independent Colleges and Universities (WVICU) scholarship program.

The WVICU created the Circle of Vision Scholarship Program in 1996 for West Virginia residents. Since the program’s first year in 1997, 2,952 named scholarships totaling more than $3.8 million have been awarded to deserving West Virginia students.

This past year, a number of WJU students were the beneficiaries of Circle of Vision scholarships. The total amount awarded by the WVICU totaled more than $50,000 in the 2012-13 academic year.

“We are thankful for the many individuals and companies throughout the state of West Virginia who provide funds to the Circle of Vision Scholarship Program,” said Rev. James Fleming, S.J., WJU president. “Many Wheeling Jesuit students benefit from this program and through the generosity of these foundations, many deserving West Virginia students are able to attend a private college or university in our state.”

The Circle of Vision Scholarship Program provides a unique opportunity for West Virginia students to attend one of eight private colleges and universities across the Mountain State. Many of these students are the first generation of their family to attend a college or university. More than 77 percent of the students receiving these scholarships graduate, compared to a 48 percent average graduation rate at all West Virginia colleges and universities.
Hundreds celebrate at Alumni Weekend

The highlights of the weekend were once again the Alpha On Campus and the President’s Dinner where this year’s awards were bestowed.

“Once again, we had a great crowd return for the reunion,” said Kelly Klubert, executive director of alumni and communications. “The hard work of our class agents, alumni council and staff paid off. I am thankful to all who returned and hope they enjoyed their time back home at Wheeling Jesuit.”

During the Saturday evening President’s Dinner, three alumni were given distinguished alumni awards. The St. Ignatius Distinguished Alumni Award, which recognizes a graduate who exemplifies the Jesuit ideals of extraordinary competence and personal compassion in one’s chosen profession, was presented to Charlie Lloyd, Ph.D. ’63 and Dr. John Maris ’83. The Rev. Pedro Arrupe S.J. Distinguished Alumni Award was given this year to Wheeling resident Erin McDonald ’03 for living a life in service to others.

The Alumni Association gave the Rev. Clifford M. Lewis, S.J. Award, the highest honor presented by the Alumni Council, to Wheeling physician Dr. Gregory Merrick. The award recognizes extraordinary service, contribution and dedication to Wheeling Jesuit University in the spirit of one of the University’s founding Jesuits, Father Lewis, a true “person for others.”

WJU honors alumni during weekend festivities

Tony Mazza ’06 received the Rev. James A. O’Brien Award, which recognizes young alumni who manifest a growing competence and personal compassion and who exhibit strength and promise in areas reflecting WJU’s mission of educating men and women for life, leadership and service to others.

Ten alumni were chosen by their individual classes for induction into the Hall of Honor. Created by the University’s Alumni Council, the Hall provides alumni with a voice to recognize former classmates, faculty and staff for their contributions to their profession, society and the greater WJU community.

The 2013 Hall of Honor inductees include: Linda (McAlarney) Cunningham ’63, Brian McCagh ’68, Robert Hutchings ’73, Jesse Corning ’78, Rev. Anthony Cincinnati ’83, Joseph Laker, Ph.D., former history professor selected by the class of 1988, Roseanna (Dakan) Keller ’93, Peter Ehni, Ph.D., physics professor selected by the class of 1998, Remey Munasifi ’03, and Adrienne (Greene) Tharp ’08.
Alumni and friends enjoy the weekend’s activities.
Wheeling Jesuit alumnus and Alumni Council President Richard Riley ’84 was one of six who received a WVU Foundation Award for Outstanding Teaching for 2013.

Riley was honored April 11 during a Week of Honors event.

The WVU Foundation began giving out the awards in 1985 as a way to celebrate faculty who've established patterns of distinguished teaching and exceptional innovation in teaching methods, course and curriculum design, and instructional tools.

At 29, Riley reached what would be a pinnacle to most careers but instead it was a plateau.

He was chief financial officer of a successful business, but wasn’t sure if he was moving in the direction he wanted to move. After consulting with two of his mentors, one at WVU and another at Wheeling Jesuit University, Riley decided to pursue a doctorate degree and rejoin the world of academia.

“It was more of a leap of faith than anything,” said Riley, the Louis F. Tanner Distinguished Professor of Public Accounting at WVU. “But I’ve been here 15 years and I absolutely love it.”

Riley’s passion for education shows in the innovative courses he has designed and the interest he takes in students’ success.

He is best known for developing courses like Fraud and Forensic Accounting Case Investigations, which challenges students to investigate and find solutions for real-life fraud cases. The cases come from Riley’s own professional experience, including those he’s heard of and worked on with federal fraud investigators.

He also teaches Marketplace Business Simulation, which requires a student team to manage a personal computer manufacturing company in competition with other student teams. Student teams are expected to make all financial, operational, marketing, production and other strategic decisions required to manage the business and, at the end of the exercise, they report the results of their company’s performance, including return on investment, customer satisfaction and market share to venture capitalist investors.

“The hallmark of my classroom approach is to create very challenging, simulated real-world experiences for my students,” Riley said.
Alumni speakers provide current students insight into WJU history, careers

Larry Driscoll, associate professor of criminal justice, incorporates alumni from many professional areas to teach seniors in his social science class the responsibilities they hold after graduation.

“I tell them you just can’t take, you must give back,” Driscoll explained. “By bringing in alumni, the students learn the history of the University from the people who walked the hallways before them.”

Having alumni come to speak to his class, Driscoll said, gives the students connection to Wheeling Jesuit’s history and helps them learn what choices they need to make to be successful.

“We told them to be honored to be a part of this Jesuit heritage and that they are part of a legacy that they can be proud of,” said Driscoll. In his class, Haller explained that more than 70 percent of his classmates received advanced degrees and they had one Rhodes Scholar finalist in Dr. Michael Santer and Lee Flanagan won a Woodrow Wilson scholarship to Brown University.

“In our minds, it is valuable for alumni, faculty and students to have these encounters. For our part, we as alumni get a chance to meet some of...”

New candidate’s life experience leads to ‘Love of God and neighbor without exception’

The Congregation of the Sisters of St. Joseph is pleased to announce that we have accepted Erin McDonald as a candidate for vowed membership.

McDonald ’04, who earned a bachelor of psychology degree from Wheeling Jesuit University and a master of social work degree from West Virginia University in Morgantown, W.Va., returned to Wheeling last summer from working two years in ministry in Rwanda, Africa, with the Jesuit Refugee Service. She is currently working for Catholic Charities West Virginia in the Diocese of Wheeling-Charleston.

Referring to the description from the congregation’s mission, “A Sister of St. Joseph moves always toward profound love of God and love of neighbor without distinction, from whom she does not separate herself,” McDonald said. “It encompasses the ways in which my experiences of faith, service and solidarity with the poor have changed and transformed me. … I have been so profoundly changed by these experiences that I am choosing to live a life completely rooted in love of God and love of neighbor as a Sister of St. Joseph.

“After serving two years as a humanitarian aid worker with the Jesuit Refugee Service in Rwanda, I have seen and experienced, firsthand, the brokenness in our world that is crying out for unity and reconciliation,” she explained. “As a candidate to become a Sister of Saint Joseph, I am called to be a catalyst for positive change and healing in our wounded and fractured world.”

Originally from Massachusetts, McDonald had an early connection with the Sisters of St. Joseph of Boston. When she was a child, her grandmother worked as a cook for the sisters’ convent at St. Raphael Parish there. “She sat me in the kitchen with her while she cooked,” Erin recalls. “Those sisters influenced my earliest memories.”

McDonald connected with the Sisters of St. Joseph of Wheeling in the summer of 2000, when she was a student at Regis College in Weston, Mass., and participated in our “Volunteers in Mission Program.” She then transferred to Wheeling Jesuit University to complete her degree in psychology. Later, she became the assistant director, then director of the Service for Social Action Center at the university.

As she begins her candidacy, McDonald said, “I pray for the courage to follow God’s call wherever it leads me and to embrace, with an open heart and mind, whatever the future of religious life may hold.”
Class of ’75 member competes in American Ninja Warrior show

Don Smith ’75 was one of the 100 contestants to compete on the G4 Networks’ American Ninja Warrior television show.

About a year ago, Smith learned of the television show while channel surfing. He first found the show rather amusing and then after about 45 minutes, began to see himself as a viable contestant.

After much thought, he prepared a video and submitted it to the show. The show had specific instructions, Smith said, on what to be included on the tape: a self introduction, age, where you live, occupation, family, the individual who inspires you, your biggest fan, hobbies, workout routine, athletic inclinations and a final statement, “I will be the next American Ninja Warrior.”

Taping for the fifth season of the northeast regional competition took place in Baltimore’s Inner Harbor, not far from his home in Bel Air, Maryland. Smith said at age 60 he was concerned whether he’d be prepared enough physically for this challenge.

As someone who always emphasized physical fitness, Smith said he decided he’d better step up his workout routine to be prepared in case he got the call. But he got notification to participate in the show before he could follow through with added workouts.

On April 14 he learned he was chosen to participate and taping took place on April 19.

“Fortunately, I had been preparing for this moment since last year, so I was as ready as I would ever be. At 60 years of age, I was the oldest contestant in the history of all previous seasons to qualify and run the course,” Smith added.

While Smith did not win the regional competition, his competition began airing on the G4 Network at the end of June. He plans to return in the 2014 season and hopes to conquer the course.

Davison serves as second alumni scholar in residence

Noted Florida political science professor and Wheeling Jesuit alumna discussed the role of elections on foreign policy at a public forum last October.

Joan Davison, Ph.D. ’78, presented “Do elections matter for U.S. Foreign Policy?” during her talk as the WJU Scholar in Residence for 2012. The professor of political science and the Cornell Distinguished Faculty Fellow at Rollins College lectured in several classrooms as a visiting professor during her week on campus.

“Dr. Davison’s presentation topic was timely with the presidential election last fall. Many foreign policy issues are based on reactions to world events and out of the control of the president, so it was interesting to hear her thoughts on such matters,” said John Poffenbarger, Ph.D. assistant professor of Political Science.

Launched last year, the Alumni Scholar in Residence program allows one WJU alumni each year to share his or her knowledge and vision with students, faculty and the community. Born from the alumni association’s 50-Year Club, the program began with the assistance of former Academic Vice President Stephen Stahl, Ph.D., President Rev. James Fleming, S.J. and Dr. Ed Shahady ’60, past president of the 50-Year Club.

“Having alumni such as Dr. Davison share their knowledge and expertise is one more way that our alumni give back to Wheeling Jesuit – that is the main premise on which this program was founded,” said Shahady, the 2011 Alumni Scholar.

In addition to receiving her bachelor’s degree from Wheeling Jesuit, Davison was recognized at WJU for her academic and athletic achievements with numerous awards and honors. She also earned a master’s and doctorate from the University of Notre Dame.
New alumni recruitment program aids Wheeling Jesuit enrollment efforts

Nearly 75 alumni from across the country are aiding Wheeling Jesuit University’s recruitment efforts by growing enrollment.

This small army of volunteers is part of the Alumni in Recruitment (AIR) program. Launched in June 2012, AIR partners alumni with admission recruiters to attract prospective students. The alumni volunteers can sign up to attend a college fair, adopt a high school or introduce Wheeling Jesuit to their network of educational constituencies.

“We are excited to have nearly 75 alumni join the Alumni in Recruitment family. The program is specifically designed to engage our alumni to ‘help us grow’ the university’s enrollment,” said Larry Vallar, vice president for Enrollment Management.

For more than a year, Vallar and his team, along with the Alumni Council, have collaborated to design and build a comprehensive AIR training manual and web site.

“The idea of AIR was born some time ago, but was made a top priority by the administration last summer. More than a year later, we have many dedicated volunteers who are helping our recruiters in 13 states,” Kelly Klubert ’85, executive director of alumni and communications said. “By sharing experiences, AIR volunteers give prospective students an inside, personal look into what makes this University such a special place.”

Alumni Council member Judy Geary ’63 of Washington, Pennsylvania, explained many graduates are devoted to WJU and often ask, “How can I help?” Geary said, “It’s about engagement and leveraging relationships. AIR volunteers will allow us to reach many communities beyond what the University can do on its own. This is a wonderful way to grow the circle.”

Canton resident Jerry Schroer ’86 is the Alumni Council AIR ambassador and AIR member. Thanks to his relationships with 20 high schools in the Cleveland/Akron/Canton, Ohio areas, outreach to schools increased in the past year. He said a spike in student inquiries from Northeastern Ohio is proof of how AIR volunteers can impact enrollment.

“I can’t think of a better way to help than to encourage students to attend my alma mater,” Schroer said.

“We are a young university, therefore many of our alumni are just beginning in their careers, so those who cannot give in dollars can give their time by helping us recruit students. Their efforts to help us grow will provide a major economic boost for the university,” he said.

For more information on AIR or to participate, log onto the AIR web site at www.wju.edu/alumni/air, or contact the Alumni Office at 1-800-888-2586 or alumni@wju.edu.

the impressive young people who are part of the continuum at WJU,” Haller added about his classroom interaction.

Haller said meeting and interacting with students and faculty at his alma mater “reinforces the pride I have in WJU and its mission. And faculty members have a chance to reconnect with their former students and see the success of their own efforts. I think it is a win, win, win opportunity.”

Driscoll said the more students hear about the history of the University and the alum’s journey of how they got to today, “the more it helps current students understand what lies ahead and what their responsibility is for the next generation of WJU students.”

A tradition of excellence

Behind the scenes of WJU

THE WHEELING JESUIT VOLLEYBALL program has enjoyed unprecedented success over the last decade – success that is bred from a quality that is uniquely Jesuit in college athletics — a stable, close-knit, family environment.

The hard work and determination of the husband-wife coaching duo of Christy and Matt Benner resonate with their players and families, create success on the court and establish a unique bond with every graduating class.

The story of the Benners’ success at WJU began in 1997 when Matt Benner was hired as a volunteer assistant. He was an assistant under three different leaders through 2001. In 2002, he was offered the head coaching position, however, Matt suggested his wife be named head coach.

The rest is history.

Since then, the duo has stabilized the revolving door of coaches, creating a tradition of excellence in the program. The Cards have been to the NCAA Elite 8 the past two seasons, made three trips to the NCAA Sweet 16, captured 10 WVIAC championships and have countless individual awards and coaching accolades.

According to the Benners, the first year or two of recruiting were challenging, but successful on the court. The 2003 squad consisted of mostly seniors, finishing the season with 38-3 record, which stands as the best record to date. The 2012 squad tied that mark.

The following year, with the graduation of seven seniors, five of which started, the Lady Cards found a way to go undefeated in the conference with a team made up of mostly freshmen.

“Cardinal volleyball is very unique from other programs,” Christy said. “We approach everything differently, in hopes that each student-athlete leaves enjoying their time here. It is truly a close-knit family.”

By the 2006 season, the recruiting formula had changed, and the Benners were able to even the talent pool in each class and be in a position to reload, rather than rebuild, every four years.

“There is a certain type of athlete that we look for, and we have been very fortunate to find these well-rounded student-athletes year after year,” Matt said. “Coaches are not successful without talented players. Recruiting is the key – everything revolves around recruiting.”

WJU’s recruiting starts full force in the spring. The Benners are on the road nearly every weekend from the end of January until the end of May — evaluating talent for the future classes two or three years in advance. The coaches target three or four early commitments from high school juniors going into their senior year, and the goal is to have their top prospects committed to WJU before their senior year begins.

“There is no better feeling than to go to a high school match and watch a student-athlete compete as a senior, knowing they are committed to Wheeling Jesuit, no better feeling,” Matt explained.

In addition, the Benners create an atmosphere in which their players can be successful and insist on creating an environment where the team will be able to compete at the highest level.

“Our practices are intense, but at the same time a lot of fun. The tempo and pace of practice is what makes it all work; everyone is involved,” Christy stated.

Matt added, “A belief in your team during warm-ups or at the beginning of a session can change the entire practice, that’s what makes our staff player-friendly. We work on the important things and approach practice like champions from day one.”

“Our spring season is vital to the
the volleyball program

The Jesuit volleyball program competes at the national level and earns several individual and team awards every year, but most rewarding are the comments from officials, opposing coaches, parents from other teams and spectators.

“The comments expressed to us make everything worthwhile. From the way we conduct ourselves on and off the court with class, respect and sportsmanship. All of those things combined are the ingredients needed to be a champion, a championship team and good citizens,” said Christy. “They are truly better than any victory!” 💕
The Wheeling Jesuit University Athletic Department found a new conference to call home after spending 56 years with the West Virginia Intercollegiate Athletic Conference (WVIAC).

During the summer of 2012, several institutions announced their departure from the WVIAC at the end 2012-13 season, which caused the league to fold after 89 years in existence. As a result, the presidents of 12 universities jointly announced the formation of a new, all-sports athletic conference — the Mountain East Conference (MEC).

“This is the right move at the right time for Wheeling Jesuit University,” said WJU President, Rev. James Fleming, S.J. “We will be in a conference with other institutions whose values and priorities are similar to ours. We also believe this will be one of the most competitive Division II conferences in the country.”

The MEC application for membership was approved by the NCAA Division II Membership Committee. The conference will officially become the 25th NCAA Division II league on Sept. 1 and immediately assumes active status.

“This is a very exciting time for the Mountain East Conference and our 12 charter institutions,” MEC Commissioner Reid Amos said. “Every one of our schools has great history, great tradition and now a great future as an MEC member. It has been an exhilarating experience to be a part of the formation of a group of like-minded institutions that has laid a strong foundation for a long and successful association.”

The 12 charter members include nine West Virginia institutions – Concord University, Fairmont State University, Glenville State College, Shepherd University, the University of Charleston, West Liberty University, West Virginia State University, Wheeling Jesuit University, and West Virginia Wesleyan College – along with Notre Dame College and Urbana University from Ohio and the University of Virginia’s College at Wise.

“This is very exciting news,” said Wheeling Jesuit Director of Athletics Danny Sancomb. “Formation of the conference has been a long, ongoing process, and the presidents, commissioner and ADs worked long and hard to make this transition a reality.

“We look forward to being a member of a league where all of the institutions share the same goal for their athletic programs,” Sancomb stated. “We are sad to see the WVIAC go away, but at the same time, are looking forward to being members of the Mountain East Conference.”

The MEC expects to crown conference champions in 16 sports during its first season of operation. They include: men’s and women’s basketball, baseball, men’s and women’s cross country, football, men’s and women’s golf, men’s and women’s soccer, softball, men’s and women’s tennis, men’s and women’s track and field and volleyball.

As a new conference, the MEC’s conference champions won’t be able to receive automatic NCAA tournament bids during the 2013-14 and 2014-15 academic years, but will be eligible for at large bids for NCAA championships.

Give WJU the HOMEFIELD ADVANTAGE

It is an exciting time for the student-athletes at Wheeling Jesuit as support for our Homefield Advantage athletic facility upgrade grows. We have received more than $1 million in donations and pledges to make the dream of a first-class athletic facility a reality for our athletes.

Now is your opportunity to help. The University has launched a campaign to make major improvements to our athletic facilities that will enhance athletic and recreational experiences for WJU students and members of the local community. In addition to providing better facilities, the renovations will extend the practice season, save money on travel and increase our competitive position.

Planned improvements include installing new synthetic turf and lighting at the stadium field, resurfacing the track, installing a new scoreboard and seating and renovating and expanding the locker rooms.

The University already has received support from the WJU Cardinal Athletic Club, WesBanco, Main Street Bank, and the friends and family of our late bishop, the Most Rev. Bernard Schmitt, in whose memory the main playing field will be named.
